USF Conference Reaches Out to Gallucci

TAMPA, FLA -- The University of South Florida reached out to New Jersey to add to its faculty for its Third Annual Sports Medical Conference seminar on “Behind the Scenes as a Team Physician” this past month.

John Gallucci, Jr., the owner and founder of JAG Physical Therapy in West Orange and Warren, joined the prestigious staff of doctors, educators, athletics trainers and physical therapists for the conference. Dr. Charles Nofsinger and Jeff Konin PhD, two Assistant Professors at USF’s Department of Orthopaedics and Sports Medicine, directed the three-day conference which featured some of the top names in sports medicine.

“This was an amazing conference and I was honored to be part of the faculty,” explained Gallucci, who also serves as the Medical Coordinator of Major League Soccer and is recognized as one of the experts in the field of treating sports injuries. “We had over 25 experts in the field of sports medicine and the exchanging of ideas and information was extremely valuable.”

The conference examined a wide variety of issues that are extremely relative in the world of sports medicine, including political challenges for college and high school team physicians, drug testing in high schools, pain management and concussion management.

“Sports medicine has become a complex field for all the people involved in the health and welfare of today’s athletes,” noted Gallucci. “It’s very important to examine all of the different ways to handle the various problems that arise in the treatment of people.”

Gallucci stays on the cutting edge of new treatments for people with orthopedic injuries and has recently opened up a new JAG Physical Therapy office in Warren to compliment his West Orange office. For additional informational about JAG PT, log onto www.jagpt.com.
